Recently, the balance of academic performance and part-time jobs has come into sight as a heated topic, which attracts the attention of the general public. According to many undergraduates, they have to spend much time on doing their part-time jobs, while less time is left on their academic performance, which leads to the imbalance between them.

In theory, many methods may be used to address the problem, but the following two are crucial. To begin with, making a detailed plan for time management, because it is useful to help students arrange their time properly. In addition, since there are various part-time jobs, it is widely accepted that they should choose the right part-time jobs selectively to avoid wasting much time on some back-breaking work.

Based on the above discussion, it is advisable for us to take steps to address this problem. Once we can strike the balance between them, we will embrace a bright future both in our study and life.

Chopsticks, seemingly two long sticks, have been in China over 3,000 years with profound cultural connotation. They are round at one end and square at the other end, symbolizing the heaven and earth respectively, which is ancient Chinese people's understanding of the universe. Moreover, the square end is on the top, and the round end is on the bottom that touches with food directly which represents the old Chinese saying "Food is the first thing for people". Meanwhile, chopsticks are served with more practical purposes. Compared with knives and forks, they are more flexible. They can be regarded as the extension of human fingers in that they can do whatever fingers can do.
